The fragmented figurative works of Yulia Bas explore the phenomena of how something perceivable as decaying and deconstructed may turn out to be a new assembly.

Therefore she conveying her controversial feelings of anxieties of contemporary realm alongside with hope for the new generation stepping into metamodern quirky culture to reinvent themselves in the post-digital world.

From another perspective Yulia's work seek to express the complexities of human self-consciousness. They start from the premise that our personalities are in a constant state of flux as we seek out greater wholeness. And recognise – as an integral part of that search – that our minds and bodies are locked in permanent and insurmountable combat.

Born amid the dying embers of Soviet Russia, Yulia's early years were set against a backdrop of constant transformation, as entire countries unravelled and reformed. Her work also thus sets out to excavate the social biases buried in our deepest subconscious memories – an inheritance from our ancestors, with their triple burden of tradition, patriarchy and culture.

Moving to Europe helped her question and reshape the worldview she had grown up with and informs her artistic practice in Barcelona to this day – a blend of perspectives: neither fully “other” nor fully “Western”.

Currently lives and works in Barcelona, Spain.
